"Did you ever reckon up, my dear, how much you spend for postage stamps in the course of the year?" asked Mr. Gray, as he lit his fragrant cigar. "Well, let us see. You write at least five letters a week, which is fivepence, and fifty-two times five are twenty-one shillings and eightpence a year, to say nothing of paper and envelopes. I haven't a correspondent in the world, outside my business."

"Your friends," said his wife, "live near you, while mine are in another county. Do you wisn me to give up writing to them?"

And her face took an extra tinge of color.

Mr. Gray turned back.

"No."

"I thought so. A sheer waste of money. What fools women are! What would a man think of putting a piece of stiff, white, papery-nothing around his neck, that cost eighteen pence? And nearly half a sovereign for gloves and slippers! Well, I must say, Annie, you are growing extravagant. I pay for your dresses, bonnets, and all the essentials, without a murmur, that is," said he, with sundry recollections to the contrary, "when they come within reasonable bounds. But these li'tle things, which are of no earthly account, I should think you might do without."

Mrs. Gray sighed.

"He means well," she said: "but men seem to think women are like children—not to be trusted with any money."

Meantime, Mr. Gray was soliloquising.

Annie is one of the best in the world, but she does not know the worth of money any more than a child. That seventeen shillings will be all spent before night.

shillings will be all spent before night. Women can't keep money."

Mrs. Gray went to town as she intended; but she walked instead of riding, in order to save her money. While in town she felt faint and hungry from her walk, and would have liked a lunch, but she had no money to spare.

"Oh, by the way, Annio, did you go to own to day?" asked Mr. Gray, at night.

"Yes," she replied.

"Spent every penny. I'll be bound."

"Spent every penny, I'll be bound," jokingly.
"No, I have exactly fourpence left, but "No, I have exactly fourpence left, but I walked both ways, got no crepe de lisse, and went without luncheon, although faint with hunger."

Mr. Gray looked shocked.

"Well, if I had only to ask, first rate."
"Well, then, suppose you let me carry the pocket-book for a week."
"But, Annie, it isn't practicable. You couldn't attend to business at the ware house."

"Of sourse not. It is only your personal expenses I will regulate. You come to me for what money you apend for yourself, that's all, and give me your word that you will take no money from the office."

"All right. I'll do it, just to show you that it's easy enough. Here's the pocket-book." And he gave it into her hand. "But I'll take a shilling first to begin on."

"I'll risk it," he said to himself. "Perhaps I'll not want to buy anything. I'll show Annie that a man can do without

He lit a cigar and handed the mate to Frank, as he did this. The two conversed of old times antil they reached Mr. Gray's place of business, when they separated, agreeing to be at the Grays' at 6. Annie was apprised of his coming by a note from her husband.

Going home, that night, as was his invariable custom he ran into Benson's to buy some cigars. Benson was surprised buy some cigars.

"Are they not good?" inquired the dealer. We think them our choicest

"They are good. But on second thought I will not take any to night."

Mr. Gray had always purchased his cigars as he used them; but now he wished he had a box at home. However, be decided to ask his wife for some money and run out and fill his case without his friend's knowledge. Twenty-four hours had passed, and he had already begun to experience a feeling of shame, and a disinclination, to ask for money. A thought of Annie crossed his mind.

"Pshaw, she doesn't have to treat friends to cigars," he muttered.

Frank Raymond was already at his house, and Annie had a tempting little supper for them, and Annie was looking her prettiest. When supper was over he took his wife aside, and asked for half-acrown, which she gave him grudgingly. Then he excused himself for a moment and bought some cigars. They were and bought some cigars. They were wretched affairs, however, and filled the house with a villainous odor, for he had to get them at a new place, Benson's being too far off. The next day the two friends started out together, when Mr. Gray, with an air of having forgotten something, said: "Excuse me a moment." "I'll go back with you, if you have for-getten anything," said Mr. Raymond. Mr. Gray clapped his hand on his tingling with shame at the deceit. But he could not risk having his friend go back with him and stand by while he

Mr. Gray was lucky that day. He had no calls for money, and he had half a dozen of those horrid cigars left, a couple of which he smoked in the street after his friend left him. In fact, he concluded to risk another day in the same way. But on this day he realized the old adage, "It never rains but it pours," for from being asked to change a five pound note, to getting his coat ripped, and asking for credit at his tailor's, the day was a series of mortifications.

Annie was unaware of all this, in fact she thought her husband was failing to realize the situation; so when, at night, Mr. Gray asked her for money to spend the next day she wickedly put him off with some excue, and ingeniously evaded the request until he was force to prefer it "I want a few shillings, Annie. Please get them for me," he said, in an off hand

"A few shillings! What do you want with a few shillings?"
"There, Annie, don't bother a fellow.

I'm in a hurry."

But with grave deliberation she drew out a shilling, and laid it down, then another, next a sixpence, next a fourpennypiece, and last threepence in coppers.
"Let me see—three shilling—sixpence.

"Yes," and Mr. Gray hustled them into his pocket, and hurried from the married, and having shrinings doled out to me in that way."

He pitied his friends embarrassment but did not appear to notice it. Instead, he chatted unconcernedly of old friends and past times. Suddenly turning a corner, they met two mutual acquaintances.

Hand shakings and inquiries followed, and the four had so much to say that Mr. Gray decided to send a note to his partner and spend the forenoon with his friend, Before separating, a little excursion to Brighton was proposed for Monday. Mr. Gray invited them, meantime, to spend the evening at his house. The evening passed was a pleasant one.

Annie was in excellent spirits, sang and played and was altogether charming. Mr. Raymond, remembering the money, decided that matrimony was indeed a snare when women were sedeceptive.

The next day, which was Sunday, Mrs. Gray, without being asked, gravely handed her husband two shillings. Mr. Raymond was present, but did not appear to notice it. He was apparently engrossed with the book he was reading. But he heard Mrs. Gray ask: heard Mrs. Gray ask:
"What's that for? Oh, the contribution

box. Thank you," he said. But to him-self he added: "Why not save it to go with the shilling I have already, so as not to be compelled to ask for money on Tuesday?
Then if I succeed in getting some for Monday's trip, without the knowledge of my friends, this absurd face will end, without any more unpleasantness." Monday morning came all too soon, for try as he would, he could not get the attention of Annie when beendeavored to broach the subject of the projected trip. Fidgetting with his knife and fork he cleared his throat at last and in a nervous way made the plunge.

Mrs. Gray elevated her sycbrows.

"To Brighton? Pray for what? It is hardly the season for excursions."

Mr. Raymond really pitied his friend's evid at distress, so he said, jokingly: "19 by, you see, Mrs. Gray, we want to get off for a time as we used to when we were boys."

The lady smiled grimly and replied firmly:

"Albert is, as you see, too extravagant by half. I cannot, in the present state of our finances, give my consent to his go-economise."

"Why not have allowed her to use her own judgment? Perhaps she intended to economise in other ways," said Frank.

"I believe she said something of the kind. But to tell the truth, I had got into the way of thinking that women needed to be continually curbed, or they would run into extravagances."

"It's a shame to treat a highspirited woman in that way."

"I realize it more fully than you can, unless you go through with my experience. Annie said she had done plain sewing to pay for the things she needed rather than ask me for money. I understand it now; for I would far rather have earned the money for our trip by sawing carned the money for our trip by sawing wood than have asked for it. Fancy wood than have asked for it. Fancy having to always ask."

"Do you know, Albert. I am glad this happened. I may marry sometime; in fact, I'm thinking of it strongly; and now I shall avoid the course you have taken. Otherwise, I presume I might have done just the same. I believe a great many men do."

"Do? Why, yes. My mother never had a penny without asking father for it all, and was prudence and industry personified. I'll turn over a new leaf. Ah, here come our friends."

sonfied. I'll turn over a new leaf. Ah, here come our friends."
Mr. Raymond, to Mr. Gray's 'great relief, said it would be impossible for him to go on the proposed trip, owing to unforeseen circumstances, whereupon Mr. Gray, in an off-hand manner proposed that as Frank could not go, they should all come to his house that evening again.
"My wife will be glad to see you," said he.

was himself again, or could be if he chose. But his wife had mirrored his past actions so forcibly, that he had no wish to repeat himself. Annie had taken care to curb his extravagances, by giving always a little less than he asked for, and invariably inquiring how he spent it; and, meantime, reckoning up how much he had each day, with great ex-prerogative."

It was Tuesday evening, at half past six precisely, when Mrs. Gray said this. At the same time she handed her hus had his pocket-book, and then returned to her seat. Mr. Gray counted the money carefully, and then divided it into two equal piles. This accomplished he crossed over to his wife and placed one in her lap, saying:

"Henceforth we will share alike. Buy what you choose. I have faith in your prudence and judgment. I am not infallible. Why need I sit in judgment upon you?"

Gray's eyes glistened with pride and happiness, as she replied.

"Believe me, Albert, you will never have cause to regret this; for now I shall have an opportunity to use my reasoning faculties."

He never did regret it.

The recent heavy rains flooded a large portion of the city of New Orleans by the overflow of the Mississippi River, and the paper above credited, in speaking of the circumstance, gives the following graphic account of the desolation and ruin:

"No person without a personal visit to the overflowed district can form any estimate of the terrible pictures of desolation there presented. It appears almost as if pestilence had stricken the section, and there hangs over it a silence that is oppressive.

It would then pass as a joke. But Mr. Raymond did not make any remarks. Instead, he thought to there was no fall in the water, and if anything an increase outside the canals. In the canals there was a fall of some inches, but that did not benefit the district separated from them by levees. The overflow of the protection levee down on the Claiborne Canal, for a condown on the Claiborne Canai, for a con-siderable distance, extending from Elysi-an Fields street to Poland, for a depth of fifteen inches, allowed the back water from the lake to flow in, which increased

On the cistern top they had a little charcoal furnace placed, on which they could do a little cooking.

The reporter at once offered to take the family to a place of safety and see that all were carefully sheltered, but the father said that he would prefer to remain, as he was sick, and if brought to the city he could do nothing. He would try and stand it, and no offer could get him to leave his little domicile. He had saved a few chickens, which were on the roof, and the relief boat provided them with ample food.

BURT, who was shot and supposed to have been killed during a charge on the Confederate carth-works in front of Richmond, Va., rear the "Seven Pines," on day above mentioned. We hope that by finding the sword and revolver we may get some information as to the death of Lieut. Burt, or the disposal of his body. Would pay a liberal price for them or either of them. Have been informed that the carth-works mentioned were occupied by Gen. Bratton's Brigade and Hampton Legion—all South Carolina troops. Address FRANK BURT, Mannington, W. Va.

PERRY, HOUSTON CO., GA., Jan. 28, 1880.

In the year 1873, there were two negro prisoners confined in the jail of this county, who were very badly afflicted with that loathsome disease Syphills. In my official capacity as Ordinary, I employed Capt. C. T. Swift, then a resident of this place, to cure them, under a contract, "mo cure, no pay." He administered to them his celebrated Syphillite Specific, and in a few weeks I felt bound, under my contract, to pay him out of the county treasury, as he had effected a complete and radical cure.

In testimony I bereunto set my official signature and seal.

We take pleasure in saying that the S. S. S. Is giving good satisfaction. We have had excellent results from a number of cases. One gentleman, who had been confined to his bed ix ucets with Syphilitic Rheumatism, has been cured entirely, and speaks in the highest praise of it. It also acts well in primary as in secondary and tertiary cases.
